FITRAT AS A PUBLICIST AND EDITOR - HIS ROLE IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF JADID JOURNALISM AND NATIONAL CONSCIOUSNESS

Jasmina CHORIYEVA
O‘zbekiston jurnalistika va ommaviy kommunikatsiyalar universiteti talabasi
ORCID:0009-0001-7770-313X

Abstract: This article examines the multifaceted activity of Abdurauf Fitrat as a publicist and editor, highlighting his decisive role in the formation of Jadid journalism and the modernization of national consciousness in Central Asia at the beginning of the twentieth century. Fitrat’s journalistic and editorial legacy is analyzed in the context of socio-political transformations, cultural awakening, and educational reform. Special attention is paid to his contributions to Jadid periodicals, his editorial principles, language and style, and his influence on the ideological orientation of the national press. The study demonstrates that Fitrat’s publicism served not only as a means of information dissemination but also as a powerful instrument of social mobilization and intellectual renewal.

Keywords: Abdurauf Fitrat, Jadid journalism, publicism, editorial activity, national press, modernization, intellectual heritage

Introduction: The emergence of Jadid journalism at the turn of the twentieth century marked a crucial stage in the development of national media and public thought in Turkestan. In this historical context, journalism became not merely a channel for news transmission but a platform for enlightenment, reformist ideas, and socio-political debate. One of the most prominent representatives of this movement was Abdurauf Fitrat, whose activity as a publicist and editor left a profound imprint on the evolution of national journalism.

Fitrat belonged to the generation of Jadid intellectuals who viewed the press as a strategic tool for awakening national consciousness, promoting education, and integrating society into global cultural and intellectual processes. His journalistic works addressed urgent issues such as ignorance, colonial dependence, cultural stagnation, language reform, and the need for modernization. As an editor, Fitrat contributed to shaping the ideological direction, stylistic standards, and professional ethics of Jadid publications.

The relevance of studying: Fitrat’s publicistic and editorial heritage lies in its enduring significance for understanding the origins of modern Uzbek journalism, the formation of national identity, and the role of media in social transformation. This article aims to analyze Fitrat’s activity as a publicist and editor, his thematic priorities, editorial strategies, and his contribution to the development of Jadid journalism.

The Historical Context of Jadid Journalism

Jadid journalism emerged in response to profound political, social, and cultural challenges faced by Muslim societies in Central Asia under colonial rule. The Jadids sought to reform traditional education, promote scientific knowledge, and foster national self-awareness. The press became one of their most effective instruments.

Newspapers and magazines such as Taraqqiy, Sadoi Turkiston, Hurriyat, and Oyina served as platforms for discussing reformist ideas, criticizing social backwardness, and advocating progress. In this environment, the publicist assumed the role of educator, moral guide, and political thinker. Fitrat's entry into journalism coincided with the peak of Jadid intellectual activity, allowing him to influence both content and form of the emerging national press.

Fitrat as a Publicist: Ideological Foundations

Fitrat's publicism was grounded in the idea that social progress could only be achieved through enlightenment and critical thinking. His articles reflected a deep concern for the fate of the nation and emphasized the necessity of reform in education, culture, and governance.

A defining feature of Fitrat's publicistic style was the synthesis of Eastern intellectual traditions with Western political and philosophical concepts. He skillfully employed historical comparisons, rhetorical questions, and sharp social critique to engage readers. Fitrat did not limit himself to abstract theorizing; instead, he addressed concrete social problems, such as the condition of schools, the role of women in society, and the responsibility of intellectuals.

His publicistic texts often carried a polemical character, aimed at challenging conservative views and encouraging active participation in reform processes. In this sense, Fitrat's journalism functioned as a catalyst for public debate and ideological transformation.

Editorial Activity and Its Significance

As an editor, Fitrat played a crucial role in shaping the structure, content, and mission of Jadid periodicals. Editorial work in the Jadid press required not only technical skills but also ideological clarity and moral responsibility. Fitrat approached editing as a form of intellectual leadership.

He emphasized accuracy, clarity, and social relevance in published materials. Under his editorial guidance, periodicals became platforms for diverse genres, including analytical articles, essays, literary works, and translations. Fitrat encouraged young authors and intellectuals to contribute, thereby fostering a new generation of journalists and writers.

Editorial independence was a key principle for Fitrat. Despite censorship and political pressure, he sought to maintain the critical and reformist orientation of publications. This editorial stance contributed to the credibility and influence of Jadid journalism among readers.

Language and Style in Fitrat's Journalism

One of Fitrat's major contributions to Jadid journalism was his approach to language and style. He advocated for a clear, accessible, and expressive language that could reach a broad audience. Rejecting overly archaic forms, Fitrat promoted linguistic reform as part of cultural modernization.

His publicistic language combined emotional appeal with logical argumentation. This stylistic balance allowed him to address complex issues in a manner understandable to ordinary readers while retaining intellectual depth. Fitrat's mastery of language enhanced the persuasive power of his articles and reinforced the educational mission of the press.

Socio-Political Themes in Fitrat's Articles

Fitrat's journalism addressed a wide range of socio-political issues. He criticized colonial policies, social injustice, and political passivity, urging readers to take responsibility for their collective future. His articles often emphasized national unity, cultural dignity, and the importance of self-determination.

Education occupied a central place in Fitrat's publicistic agenda. He viewed modern schooling as the foundation of national progress and repeatedly highlighted the need for curriculum reform, teacher training, and intellectual openness. Another significant theme was cultural identity. Fitrat sought to reconcile national traditions with modern values, arguing that genuine progress did not require abandoning cultural heritage but reinterpreting it in a contemporary context.

Fitrat and the Formation of National Journalism

Fitrat's publicistic and editorial activities contributed to the institutionalization of journalism as a social profession. He helped establish standards of responsibility, critical thinking, and public service that later became integral to national journalism. By treating journalism as a form of civic engagement, Fitrat elevated the role of the journalist from mere reporter to public intellectual. This understanding influenced subsequent generations and shaped the ethical foundations of the national press.

Comparative Perspective: Fitrat and Other Jadid Publicists

While Fitrat shared common goals with other Jadid figures such as Mahmudkhoja Behbudiy and Abdulla Avloniy, his publicism was distinguished by its philosophical depth and analytical rigor. Compared to Behbudiy's pragmatic approach, Fitrat's writings displayed a more pronounced theoretical orientation.

This diversity within Jadid journalism enriched the intellectual landscape and allowed the movement to address multiple dimensions of social reform. Fitrat's contribution complemented and expanded the collective effort of Jadid publicists.

The Contemporary Relevance of Fitrat's Legacy

Today, Fitrat's journalistic heritage remains relevant for understanding the role of media in social development. His emphasis on intellectual responsibility, ethical journalism, and national consciousness resonates with contemporary debates on media credibility and public trust.

In the era of digital media and globalization, revisiting Fitrat’s ideas offers valuable insights into how journalism can balance national identity with global engagement.

Conclusion: Abdurauf Fitrat’s activity as a publicist and editor represents a foundational chapter in the history of Jadid journalism and national media development. Through his writings and editorial leadership, Fitrat transformed journalism into an instrument of enlightenment, social critique, and cultural renewal.

His legacy demonstrates that journalism, when guided by intellectual integrity and social responsibility, can play a decisive role in shaping national consciousness and promoting progress. The study of Fitrat’s publicistic and editorial heritage is therefore essential not only for historical scholarship but also for contemporary media theory and practice.

References:

1. Fitrat, A. Selected Works. Tashkent: Fan Publishing House, 2006.
2. Behbudiy, M. Journalistic Heritage. Tashkent: Ma’naviyat, 2001.
3. Avloniy, A. Turkic Gulistan or Morality. Tashkent: Sharq, 1992.
4. Karimov, N. Jadid Movement and National Awakening. Tashkent: Akademnashr, 2010.
5. Qosimov, B. History of Uzbek Journalism. Tashkent: O‘zbekiston, 2015.